it's hard to imagine that Adidas would have launched Micropacer's futuristic work in the early 1984, and even said it was the first pair of shoes with an electronic intelligence system.

Micropacer is the most talked about is the tongue placed on the electronic calculator, computing speed, distance and calories burned in use at the same time, the idea remains quite new. More than thirty years later, Adidas is also ready to re launch Micropacer OG, a full reproduction of the year's technology, and the use of woven surface as well as injection EVA midsole to make it lighter and comfortable. If over the next thirty years, we do not know at the foot of the shoe will evolve into a Shenme look like?
